As we set out in our papers which the Court has read, we believe that this case presents a unique opportunity to reconcile what we think is the tension between the Higginbotham ruling and the Tellabs ruling, and specifically the reason why we think it presents a good opportunity for a 1292 clarification is that the plaintiffs have taken the position that Higginbotham is limited to its facts, and if that is, in fact, the case, it represents a significant change that the defendants do not believe is warranted in the law governing confidential sources. The second -- so that's a clean and control and legal issue we believe the Court of Appeals can and should weigh in on.

And in addition, because this case is predicated on a single confidential source that's not corroborated by other confidential sources, we also believe that factually, it tests the outer limits of what the Seventh Circuit would allow in the context of a PSL or a case pleaded on the basis of confidential sources.

And so for those two reasons, both the factual context and the legal tension between two controlling decisions, and the fact that the presence of the confidential source allegations was the difference between dismissal on the one hand in the first motion and survival in the second, that this would be an appropriate case for 1292 review.

THE COURT: Well, is your position -- I just want to

1 09:31:08 2 09:31:12 3 09:31:19 4 09:31:22 5 09:31:23 6 09:31:26 7 09:31:28 8 09:31:32 9 09:31:36 10 09:31:39 11 09:31:43 12 09:31:47 13 09:31:50 14 09:31:54 15 09:31:57 16 09:32:01 17 09:32:04 18 09:32:06 19 09:32:11 20 09:32:13 21 09:32:15 22 09:32:18 23 09:32:21 24 09:32:25 25 09:32:27

make sure I understand your position. Is your position that Higginbotham requires multiple confidential sources? Is there a per se rule in your view established by Higginbotham?

MR. FILIP: No, the defendants --

THE COURT: Is it quantity rather than quality?

MR. FILIP: No, it's quality. We don't take the position that there is a one confidential source rule. What we do identify for the Court is that the context here is that we do just have one confidential source. That doesn't make it per se invalid under Higginbotham. But given all the concerns about anonymity and the need for particularity that are identified in Higginbotham, we do think that the presence of just one source uncorroborated by others, which was the fact that was present in both Higginbotham and Tellabs, that that does test the outer bounds of where a confidential source can help substantiate a complaint and we think pushes it much closer into the Higginbotham camp.

Now, if Tellabs has had the dramatic effect that the plaintiffs suggested, that is a legal issue that needs clarification because this is a recurring issue. As the Court has seen, many cases are pleaded on the basis of these confidential sources now. And where defendants confront with just one and it's unidentified and not corroborated, we do think that tests the outer bounds.

Conceivably, there could be sufficient allegations about one individual source that may be against past, but we don't think that's been met here, and that's why we think to the extent Higginbotham can be read that way, there is a tension and conflict between Higginbotham and Tellabs.

THE COURT: Wasn't there a qualitative difference between the confidential sources in Tellabs and Higginbotham? You have a Brazilian subsidiary, and there wasn't anything connecting the corporate headquarters in terms of knowledge, what this Brazilian operation was doing that was fraud. They certainly had access to records.

MR. PRIMIS: There was a difference between the confidential sources in Higginbotham --

THE COURT: And their --

MR. PRIMIS: -- and Tellabs.

THE COURT: And their ability to provide reliable information. My question is really was there a qualitative difference between the confidential informants or sources in Tellabs and Higginbotham, and does it make a difference or not?

MR. PRIMIS: Well, certainly there was a difference. In the Tellabs case, the Court of Appeals noted that there were 26 confidential sources, and, significantly, they provided detailed information and they corroborated one another; whereas in the Higginbotham case, there was less detail and there was no corroboration.

| 09:35:11 | 23 |
| 09:35:19 | 25 |

So the -- certainly there is a factual distinction between those two cases, and our point is that if the -- and we read them as just factually different cases. What's happening here is the plaintiffs have essentially said Higginbotham can only apply when you have a foreign subsidiary with lack of detailed allegations about the sources and an accounting issue, and that's limited to its facts. We don't think Tellabs says that. To the extent Tellabs can or is going to be read to say that, we think that's an important issue that requires clarification because the allegations here are very far from the 26 mutually corroborating sources that were present in Tellabs, in fact, sufficient by 12(b)(6) by the Court of Appeals.

So that's the issue that we think is framed out very clearly here because the way the cases have been plead and the two different rulings that we received depending on the addition of the four new paragraphs in the third amended complaint.

THE COURT: Thank you. Yes.

MR. EGLER: Thank you, your Honor.

The defendants continue to repeat that our argument is that the law is different between Higginbotham and Tellabs, but we have never made that argument, and I don't think the Tellabs case makes that argument. The facts in Tellabs and Higginbotham are very different. As your Honor pointed out in

1 09:35:23 2 09:35:27 3 09:35:30 4 09:35:35 5 09:35:39 6 09:35:42 7 09:35:46 8 09:35:50 9 09:35:54 10 09:35:57 11 09:36:00 12 09:36:05 13 09:36:09 14 09:36:12 15 09:36:18 16 09:36:22 17 09:36:25 18 09:36:29 19 09:36:34 20 09:36:37 21 09:36:41 22 09:36:46 23 09:36:50 24 09:36:53

Higginbotham, the issues related to a foreign subsidiary and information that was alleged in the complaint from that foreign subsidiary never tied the United States parent company to any of the alleged fraud that was going on.

In the Tellabs case, the issues were that the Tellabs product that was up was the company's main new product, and the information that was alleged in the complaint in that case was that the defendants -- the individual defendants and the company itself were speaking about that product voluntarily, made various statements about it. And the sources in that complaint said that the information that was bad about that product was known to the individual defendants.

So the facts with regard to Tellabs are very similar to this case. The 787 was Boeing's largest, biggest, newest product. The defendants chose to speak about it, and the information that's alleged in this complaint, although it is not alleged by multiple sources, is very straightforward and very detailed. The information that's in this complaint names specific documents that the individual defendants had access to that the individual defendants saw via e-mail, so the qualitative nature of the source is very important.

Now, I can understand the defendants' argument with regard to the corroboration and their concerns that way, but in this case also, after the class period was over, and the defendants have admitted that they performed these various and Tellabs provide different law. This Court, as a matter of fact, in its order cited both Higginbotham and Tellabs with regard to the key issue, and we pointed out that in our opposition brief, and the defendants don't respond and we didn't reply. For a 1292 motion, it has to be a pure issue of law. We are not saying that the law is different between the cases. We are saying that the facts are. And the Seventh Circuit said that the facts are different between Tellabs and Higginbotham.

| 09:37:05 | 1 | tests that were undisclosed, so there is corroboration not by |

THE COURT: Well, one common point between the two cases is that both Chief Judge Easterbrook and Judge Posner were very critical of using unnamed sources, unidentified sources, as the basis for scienter allegations in a security fraud case. Both of them were.

MR. EGLER: Yes.

THE COURT: So you are taking an issue to the mat about -- two things occur to me, and maybe these are naive reactions, but I will tell you what I am thinking. One is with the specificity of the allegations in the second amended complaint, it's difficult for me to understand how Boeing doesn't know who the confidential source is.

Second of all, why didn't the plaintiffs just name that person? I mean, I know you're taking this case to the mat, and I know Mr. Miller was involved in Tellabs, and a lot -- he has had a lot of cases with me. It seems to me you're inviting this trench warfare over pleadings by not identifying the source.

It's our experience in the industry, your MR. EGLER: Honor, that it is very difficult to get information from people when you tell them that their name will be placed on a complaint.

With regard to post-pleading motions, we are not saying that the defendants will not get this person's name. In fact, I think you read their papers right. I don't want to put words in their mouth, but I think they do know who this individual is. His direct supervisor is named in the complaint, his place of work is named in the complaint, and his name has been put in our initial disclosures. We have had various conversations with the defendants since the Court denied the motion to dismiss, and they have never asked us for I think -- and they never really say in this person's name. their papers that they don't know who he is. They just say he hasn't been disclosed.

So the defendants know who he is, and to the extent they don't know who he is, they can ask us and we will tell later.

With regard to our procedures, we think the law has been developed that we are entitled to not name the individual If they cooperate with us at the pleading on the complaint. standards, we can promise them anonymity in the pleading documents with the condition that their name will be released

I think in this case, we have gone into great detail about who this person is, what their basis for speaking -- or what their basis for the facts conveyed in the complaint are, and now that the motion to dismiss has been denied, we will turn over the name. And I think the Seventh Circuit in Tellabs affirmed that process. I understand that there has to be -- they make some comment about a certain discount that has to be given to them. I think when you look at --

> THE COURT: Steep discounts.

But when you look at the other facts that MR. EGLER: are alleged in the complaint, where this person worked, what the bases were for the allegations, I think it's very straightforward.

Now, if the Court is going to set a standard with regard to pleadings, we will examine it and we will look at it, but I can tell you that the reason we did not name, we did everything but name, but the reason we did not name our source is because when we engage sources, we find that they are much

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. PRIMIS: May I just have a brief response, your Honor?

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. PRIMIS: The defendants do not know who the confidential source is. We have suspicions about who it might be. We received a list of 225 people on a set of initial disclosures. We cannot tell who that -- who the person is from that list. He is apparently buried in there. There are sufficient errors in what that person said, which obviously we would not put into a 12(b)(6) response, that causes concern that the person was not at Boeing during the time alleged, which is why we had the second part of our motion, which is to adopt a procedure similar to what the Second Circuit authorized in Campo to do a quick check on the bona fides of the confidential source before leaving 12(b)(6) because as best we can tell, this may be a person, may be a person, who is receiving information secondhand from others who that person knew at Boeing and is filling in the blanks because they used to work there.

And so that's the best we can tell right now, and we haven't been able to define it from what plaintiffs have informed us. And so that was the alternative form of the relief that we requested in our motion, but we do think that this is testing the outer limits of what's permissible here.

THE COURT: Let me clarify something with plaintiffs' counsel. I didn't understand that the confidential source wasn't at Boeing during the events alleged in the complaint.

MR. EGLER: The confidential source, to my knowledge, did not work at Boeing during the class period. He started working there within months of that.

THE COURT: Months of what?

MR. EGLER: He started working there right after the class period. And as the complaint says, as part of his work, he was given access to files that were prepared during the class period, and those are the documents that he saw.

So unlike at Higginbotham and Tellabs where the information from the confidential source was about what somebody told somebody else and what the witnesses heard that the defendants heard, in this case, the entire process relates to documents. This witness saw documents that were prepared during the class period and delivered to the defendants. We did not represent in the complaint that he worked there during the class period. We represented that he saw e-mails from the class period that went to the defendants.

THE COURT: All right. Anything further?

MR. EGLER: The only thing I would note, your Honor, is that the defendants also raised this issue about the Campo case in the back half of their motion with regard to taking depositions, and I would note that in the Campo case in the district court, and this is left unnoted in the Court of Appeals' decision, that discovery with regard to the witnesses went both ways, and I think in this case, it's important that that happen. To the extent the defendants are raising the credibility issues with regard to the witness, his sole conveyance of information is about documents that the defendants had seen.

In the Campo case, and I have a minute order printed from the district court docket, the judge allowed the defendants to take discovery and allowed the plaintiffs to take discovery. And I think in this case, the appropriate thing to do, to the extent the Court is going to do anything, is to proceed and have the defendants produce the documents that are specifically discussed in the complaint.

MR. PRIMIS: Your Honor, the admission by counsel that the confidential source was not working at Boeing during the class period when the testing in question was being done in our view is a significant admission that was not known to us at the time of the 12(b)(6) briefing. We raised it as a concern in our motion to dismiss, that the complaint was artfully pleaded so as to disguise when or whether the person actually worked at Boeing, and we don't know if that person is even working at Boeing now.

1 09:46:26 2 09:46:29 3 09:46:33 4 09:46:37 5 09:46:41 6 09:46:45 7 09:46:47 8 09:46:51 9 09:46:56 10 09:47:00 11 09:47:01 12 09:47:04 13 09:47:06 14 09:47:11 15 09:47:14 16 09:47:17 17 09:47:22 18 09:47:26 19 09:47:30 20 09:47:34 21 09:47:39 22 09:47:44 23 09:47:49 24 09:48:02 25 09:48:07

So this underscores the significance of the points that we are making in support of a 1292(b) because we have a confidential source who wasn't at the company at the time and it walks right into the Higginbotham point about steeply discounting these witnesses. Now we have a single uncorroborated source who wasn't there during the class period. That's an additional factual wrinkle which strongly supports even further -- which strongly supports further additional review of the standards that are going to cover confidential sources in this circuit.

THE COURT: All right. Anything further?

MR. EGLER: I would just point out, your Honor, that this is not anything new. We did not represent that the witness worked there. We represented that he had seen these documents, and his credibility is not reduced because he did not work there. He said that he worked at Boeing and that he had seen these documents. When he saw them isn't an issue. It does not reduce his credibility. These documents stand for themselves, and they point to the witness' credibility, but if the documents exist, they are the issues that prove the case, not the witness himself.

THE COURT: Well, when I dismissed the second amended complaint last May, there was a rather extensive memorandum opinion that went into the background and history of the events that are the subject of the case. That was the development of Boeing's 787 Dreamliner and the events in spring of 2008, was it not?

MR. EGLER: 2009.

THE COURT: 2009, concerning two aspects, two detailed allegations concerning two aspects at the heart of the alleged fraud. One was the press releases and actions by Boeing to induce consumer and investor confidence, and, indeed, those public announcements did trigger presales of this jumbo jet, as well as investors such as the pension fund that is the lead plaintiff in this case.

The other aspect that's pleaded with detail and was pleaded with detail in the second amended complaint was the stress test results and the postponement of the first flight because of structural and/or design problems of the aircraft, which were not disclosed in the public statements, including statements at the Paris air show in I believe it was May 2009.

In any event, the case was dismissed in May without prejudice because under the high pleading standards of the Private Securities Litigation Reform Act, there wasn't sufficient -- there were not sufficient allegations of scienter or knowledge by Boeing and the two corporate officials named as defendants. There were some allegations pertaining to a confidential source that were vague -- actually, I think I used the word murky in terms of describing some of the test results -- so the complaint was dismissed without prejudice.

With respect to the second amended complaint, the plaintiffs added some allegations that the defendants characterize them as just a few paragraphs, but those just a few paragraphs are detailed, and I am looking at paragraph 139 on page 45 and the paragraphs that follow to page 47, paragraph 142. And they allege that plaintiffs' confidential source is a former Boeing senior structural analyst engineer and chief engineer who worked on the mid-body fuselage, wing The confidential integration team for the 787 program. source's job responsibilities, including stress and design review of the 787 wing joints, as well as performing finite element modeling analysis for other engineers and designers working on the 787 wing project. The confidential source reported to Larry Hall, Boeing's vice president of the wing body integration team. As part of the confidential source's job, he had direct access to, as well as firsthand knowledge of, the contents of Boeing's 787 stress test files that immortalized the results of the failed 787 wing limit load test and subsequent retest which transpired on April 21, 2009, and May 17, 2009.

Based on the confidential source's firsthand knowledge of -- his firsthand knowledge, Boeing's wing test files are an organized set of documents in Boeing's direct control that contain the wing test technical results, internal communications among the engineers who participated in conducting the wing tests, and the internal communications of the wing integration team's management concerning the results of those tests. According to the confidential source, the wing tests files include internal contemporaneous communications regarding the specific results of the wing tests and findings of the wing test integration team which the wing test integration team sent directly to defendants McNerney and Carson, the two named defendants in this case.

According to the confidential source, the wing integration team included Larry Hall, Terry Pham, P-h-a-m, who reported directly to Larry Hall, and Mike Stanton (phonetic), vice president of engineering for the 787 program, who reported directly to defendant Carson. According to the firsthand knowledge of the confidential source, the April 21st, 2009, load test file, which is in Boeing's direct control, indicates that the 787 wing structure failed at 30 percent below limit load.

Further, according to the confidential source, the April 21st, 2009, wing test file contained copies of internal electronic communications to defendants McNerney and Carson which were dated within a few days after April 21st, 2009, informing defendants that the 787's wing had failed at limit load and, as a result of that failed test, retesting of the 787 wing assembly would be necessary.

1 09:55:23 2 09:55:26 3 09:55:32 4 09:55:36 5 09:55:42 6 09:55:47 7 09:55:54 8 09:55:56 9 09:56:01 10 09:56:08 11 09:56:13 12 09:56:20 13 09:56:26 14 09:56:30 15 09:56:35 16 09:56:42 17 09:56:48 18 09:56:50 19 09:56:52 20 09:56:58 21 09:57:05 22 09:57:10 23 09:57:15 24 09:57:25 25 09:57:31

According to the confidential source, the contents of the April 21st, 2009, wing test file, including the contemporaneous communications from the wing integration team to defendants McNerney and Carson, are clear in the finding that the failed April 21st, 2009, limit load test and necessary retesting placed the plane's scheduled June 30, 2009, first flight at risk.

According to the confidential source, the May 17, 2009, wing test file indicates that the 787 passed the limit load test on May 17, 2009, but failed the ultimate load test at about 125 percent of the limit load. According to the confidential source, the fact that the 787 wing failed at 125 percent of limit load was generally known by the wing integration team immediately upon completion of the May 17, 2009, test and was characterized by the wing test file documents as a weight optimism issue -- I'm sorry, weight optimization issue.

Further, according to the confidential source, the May 17, 2009, wing test file contains detailed analysis evidencing that nine days after the failed May 17, 2009, test, delamination of the 787 wing stringers was also identified as a serious engineering issue. According to the confidential source, the May 17, 2009, wing test file contains copies of electronic internal communications dated around May 26, 2009, from the wing integration team to defendants McNerney and

Carson which specifically informed defendants McNerney and Carson that the 787 wing failed the ultimate load test, as well as the fact that additional rework of the wing attachment design was required to correct the delamination problem.

These late May 2009 contemporaneous communications contained in the May 17, 2009, test file from the wing integration team to defendants McNerney and Carson clearly communicated the wing integration team's conclusion that Boeing would be unable to conduct a June 30, 2009, first flight.

Now, these are not general allegations, they are not speculative allegations, and they are not vague allegations, unlike a number of the cases that were cited in the plaintiffs on page 1 of 6. These are very specific, and if I may use the word cogent, allegations. They connect between the general allegations which are pretty specific in plaintiffs' 59-page complaint about Boeing's behavior in the marketplace versus what was happening internally.

Given these additional allegations, I found at the time plaintiffs sought to file the second amended complaint, as I find now, that a reasonable person could draw a strong inference that Boeing and the two named defendants knew the situation with respect to testing, retesting issues and first flight information concerning the 787 at the time public statements were made that did not reveal this information and could allegedly be used in a misleading or unintending file.

So the characterization made -- characterizations made repeatedly in the motion for a certification order to the Seventh Circuit do not capture, do not capture the realities of the second amended complaint and instead focus on a theory that two decisions, one by the chief judge, Chief Judge Easterbrook, the other by Judge Posner, are at odds with each other, which isn't something that has anything to do with any of my findings and is premised on, I don't think -- I don't think the characterization is premised on a careful consideration of those two opinions that involve qualitative differences between the confidential informants.

Neither of those opinions, Higginbotham and Tellabs, encourage, let's say, the use of confidential sources in Private Securities Litigation Reform Act complaints. Quite the contrary. They are problematic. But the basis of the confidential source's information in the context of the whole complaint and whether or not the confidential informant was in a position to know the things that are alleged is critical, and it appears that the confidential source in the second amended complaint had personal knowledge of the documents that point to the knowledge by officials of the company, including the two named individual defendants.

So I don't find that the ruling denying the motion to dismiss the second amended complaint is predicated on a

1 10:02:29 2 10:02:37 3 10:02:44 4 10:02:52 5 10:02:56 6 10:03:02 7 10:03:06 8 10:03:14 9 10:03:20 10 10:03:26 11 10:03:32 12 10:03:39 13 10:03:43 14 10:03:47 15 10:03:51 16 10:03:55 17 10:03:57 18 10:04:01 19 10:04:08 20 10:04:15 21 10:04:18 22 10:04:20 23 10:04:23 24 10:04:31 25

controlling issue of law. To say that somehow my denying the motion to dismiss, the Court was relying on Tellabs and undercutting the holding of Higginbotham is not even -- was not even on the table, not even a consideration. sufficiency under the standards articulated in both those cases that predicated the ruling, and I don't think it's a fair reading of Higginbotham to say that, well, you can't -you can never base a securities fraud claim, a federal securities fraud claim, on the allegations of a confidential source no matter what the circumstances or you have to have a whole army of them, of confidential sources, you can't use just one, some sort of a per se bright-line sort of thing. Neither of those cases suggest that. It's a qualitative examination of the basis for the allegations and the particularity of the allegations concerning the confidential source's information.

Yes, my job would sure be easier if the confidential source were named, but in some ways, I think this is much ado about nothing because their 26(a)(1) disclosures should reveal who this is, discovery should reveal who this is, and we don't need special discovery rules to do it.

But I don't find that there is a controlling issue of law at stake in denying the motion to dismiss, nor do I think there is a substantial ground for a difference of opinions as to the applicability of the Higginbotham and Tellabs case.

As far as whether an interlocutory appeal would result in materially advancing this case or conserving judicial resources, I find that it would not. It would delay the case and put another layer on this litigation, and so I do not find there is a basis for certifying this poorly issued -- to me, it's not an issue about an intracircuit dispute concerning the use of confidential sources under the federal securities laws.

So the motion is denied.

And moving on to the text question, I had asked that you submit your discovery plan to chambers by last Thursday, and I didn't receive anything. Was anything submitted?

MR. MILLER: Your Honor, we submitted that through your proposed order procedure on Thursday.

THE COURT: Oh, I never saw it.

MR. EGLER: I apologize, your Honor. I have a copy of it here if I can hand it up.

MR. FILIP: Judge, we -- just to preview, I think there's a huge amount of agreement in there. There's perhaps two or perhaps three disagreements. One concerns the number of interrogatories. The parties disagree on that. One concerns the number of depositions, the parties disagree on that. And perhaps there is a third. I don't know.

MR. EGLER: Well, no, the other one was just the discovery cutoff, and that was taken care of.

MR. MILLER: I think, your Honor, we proposed a pretty aggressive -- an agreed-upon pretty aggressive schedule where everything would conclude pretty much --

THE COURT: Well, I am trying not to rule on things I haven't read, so I will look at it after I finish in court today, and if I have any questions, I will be calling you in again. If it's pretty clear, the choices are pretty clear, up or down, I will just issue an order.

MR. FILIP: Sorry about that.

MR. EGLER: If I may suggest, your Honor --

THE COURT: That's why we say courtesy copy.

MR. EGLER: I apologize.

THE COURT: I know that that's done, but we have -we still do the courtesy copy thing and try, when we have a case up for status, try to -- I try to read everything that comes in, and generally I do, except where it comes in under
